Campus outcry: 'We won't be Busch-wacked'

Budget cuts and a scandal heard 'round the country.
U of S students call for president's resignation

Hundreds of angry students, staff and alumni of the University of Saskatchewan staged a noisy protest on Tuesday, demanding the school's president resign amid a controversy over budget cuts and the firing of a professor who was later offered his teaching job back.

Students banged pots and pans and wore red felt squares on their breasts as they marched through campus until they arrived at the doorstep of university president Ilene Busch-Vishniac's office.

"We won't be Busch-wacked," they chanted.

"We want to see the current leadership of the administration gone," said protest organizer Nick Marlatte. "That means the president specifically. On top of that, the board of governors definitely needs to, in some way, show that they've been held accountable."

The cuts are part of a bigger goal to address a projected $44.5-million deficit in the school's operating budget by 2016.

Prof. Robert Buckingham was escorted from campus by police last Wednesday after writing a letter to the Saskatchewan government and Opposition New Democrats about the overhaul.

Busch-Vishniac has said the school "made a blunder" when it fired Buckingham. He was offered back his tenure position, but the president said he would not be reinstated as head of the School of Public Health. She said leadership is expected to align behind the decisions of the administration.

"I am not (considering resigning). I came here because I was attracted to the opportunities to build something at this university," she said on Tuesday.

"I've been doing exactly what the board asked me to do. I came here knowing that we had identified at this institution a significant financial structural problem that was emerging."

Minutes before a board meeting Monday night, Brett Fairbairn, the school's provost and vice-president academic, resigned. Fairbairn had signed Buckingham's termination letter. CJWW/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Back to Dog River for Corner Gas cast and crew

Province investing.
Sask. puts $2 million into production of Corner Gas movie

MARCO VIGLIOTTI

Brent Butt works on the set of Corner Gas on Sept. 9, 2008, in Regina. The pumps at Corner Gas are set to reopen, as plans have been announced for a 90-minute feature film based on the successful Saskatchewan-produced television sitcom starring Butt. It's a made-in-Saskatchewan TV phenomenon seeking a successful transition to the big screen.

And it's getting some assistance from taxpayers in this province and from a Kickstarter campaign.

The provincial government is slated to contribute $2 million to the production of Corner Gas: The Movie — a feature-film adaption of the popular Canadian TV series centred around life in the fictional, sleepy Saskatchewan town of Dog River.

"When you look at the brand recognition that Corner Gas has ... that type of exposure fits nicely with our mandate to promote our province," Pat Fiacco, Tourism Saskatchewan CEO, said on Tuesday after the province announced its funding for the production.

The provincial tourism operator will chip in $1.5 million, while Creative Saskatchewan, an arm's-length government agency, will contribute up to $500,000.

The filmmakers' Kickstarter crowdfunding campaign at Cornergasthemovie.com aims to raise $100,000 for the production in 30 days. Fans can chip in $50 for a T-shirt, $6,000 for a speaking role and $8,000 for a private premiere in a local theatre, among other rewards.

Corner Gas: The Movie is fully financed with an $8-million budget, including funds from Telefilm Canada. The Kickstarter is more about fan engagement than fundraising, said co-executive producer Virginia Thompson.

"It's not a cash grab at all," she said. "When you raise money for a movie, you're not able to raise money to create unique experiences for fans. This is something we have to do outside of that."

The campaign had raised more than $16,000 by midday Tuesday.

"The movie picks up five years after we last checked in," said Brent Butt, Saskatchewan native and series creator, in a press release.

"It has everything you loved about the show — snappy dialogue, colourful yet relatable characters, ill-fitting denim trousers."

Speaking separately to The Canadian Press, Butt said the film is "something we talked about really early on after the series ended" and that he "always wanted to go back" to it.

"This is when the timing feels right to us," Butt said, "and it happens to be the 10th anniversary of Corner Gas hitting the air."

All eight of the central cast members are set to return, as the plot focuses on a devious plan by a corporate chain that would change Dog River forever.

Regina Transit struggles to fill heavy-duty mechanic positions

Skilled labour shortage. Despite efforts, Regina Transit can't seem to attract young workers

marco.vigliotti@metronews.ca

Regina Transit is continuing an international search to fill four vacant heavy-duty mechanic positions as the city bus service struggles to compete for talent with private-sector employers capable of offering loftier wages.

Lori Bjorgan, human-resources consultant with the City of Regina, says a recent recruitment trip to Ireland and the United Kingdom failed to attract any candidates.

"We've (been posting) on websites in other provinces," Bjorgan said, noting that the positions are also posted on the SaskJobs website.

"We had focused in on northern Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia. Unfortunately, we didn't get any bites."

Though there are four vacancies in that position, the number could increase to five in the near future through a potential retirement.

A Calgary-based man is expected to fill one of those vacancies this fall.

The transit service's recruitment woes are hardly unique, as employers across the province struggle to find qualified workers for trade positions.

The skilled labour shortfall has particularly squeezed governments, which are finding it increasingly difficult to match the salaries offered by their business counterparts.

Regina Transit, Bjorgan notes, offers a market-based wage supplement that aims to close the salary gap.

The city can offer more generous pensions and benefit schemes to employees.

But those incentives, Bjorgan cautions, might not appeal to mostly young workers drawn to Saskatchewan by a promise of high-paying jobs.

Cold start to summer could mean fewer tornadoes

A tornado touches down southwest of Moose Jaw on June 26, 2012.
MARK ROBINSON/THE WEATHER NETWORK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Environment Canada says a cold start to the spring and summer might make for a calm tornado season in Saskatchewan.

Though Environment Canada doesn't make overall predictions for extreme weather seasons, warning-preparedness meteorologist Terri Lang says a system that locked Saskatchewan into a deep freeze this past winter could put a dent into the prospects for summer storms.

"We've been off to a slow start here on the Prairies, just because we've been dominated by the Arctic air," Lang said on Tuesday.

Last year, 17 tornadoes hit Saskatchewan. Lang pointed out that thunderstorms need a specific combination of heat, moisture and dry air to produce such a natural phenomenon.

Lang explained that warm air and moisture, usually carried from the Gulf of Mexico, could be lacking as cold air from the north continues to be dumped into the Prairies.

"If the weather patterns aren't right for bringing that moisture in, the severe weather season will be suppressed and won't be as active," Lang said.

"That weather pattern with that cold northerly flow really hasn't broken down that much," she added.

"I'm not saying we're in the polar vortex. I'm just saying that overall pattern is still there." MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO IN SASKATOON

Summer storms

The summer storm season in Saskatchewan usually runs from the middle of May to the middle of September with a peak in tornadoes between June and July, caused partly by moisture produced by growing crops.

- On average, the province sees about 13 tornadoes a season.

Buffalo Narrows

Man fined almost $20,000 for illegal selling of fish

Leon Morin pleaded guilty in Buffalo Narrows provincial court to four charges under the Saskatchewan Fisheries Act and Regulations for the illegal selling of fish.

The Environment Ministry says Morin unlawfully marketed fish caught for both commercial and subsistence purposes.

Officials investigated after reports in 2012 about large-scale abuse of walleye stocks in the Buffalo Narrows area.

Morin was charged after he sold undercover officers fish after the commercial season had ended.

Fish may be purchased from a licensed commercial fisher or dealer, but vendors must provide a receipt that includes the seller's contact information and where the fish was caught.

Morin is banned from commercial fishing for two years and must tell the Environment Ministry about any fish he has caught for subsistence.

Saskatchewan to add more rules to asbestos registry

Saskatchewan is putting new requirements in place for an asbestos registry that Labour Minister Don Morgan says will help protect workers from exposure.

Occupational Health and Safety rules have been amended to include additional forms of asbestos to be reported and to update required information.

A law making asbestos reporting mandatory for Crown corporations, school districts, health regions and provincial government buildings was enacted last November.

Building owners have to submit information about the presence of asbestos to the registry.

Owners who have already provided information will have to review the changes to the rules and update their submissions if need be.

Compliance and enforcement are to come into effect for all asbestos-related activities on June 1.

Car bombs kill scores in Nigeria

Twin blasts. Death toll expected to rise beyond the already 118 confirmed dead

Nigeria's emergency agency says twin car bombs that exploded at a bustling bus terminal and market in Nigeria's central city of Jos have killed at least 118 people.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attacks. However, they bore the hallmarks of Boko Haram, the Islamic extremist group that abducted nearly 300 schoolgirls last month. Boko Haram has repeatedly targeted bus stations and other locations where large numbers of people gather in its campaign to impose Islamic law on Nigeria.

The second blast came half an hour after the first, killing some of the rescue workers who had rushed to the scene.

Dozens of bodies and body parts were covered in grain that had been loaded in the second car bomb, witnesses said. A Terminus Market official said he helped remove 50 casualties, most of them dead. He spoke on condition of anonymity because he is not allowed to give information to reporters.

Militants' attacks have been coming with increasing frequency despite a year-old military state of emergency in three of Nigeria's states to curtail the uprising. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Boko Haram. Expert says West is 'late' in fight against terror group

A terrorism expert says western nations, including Canada, are coming late to the game in confronting the extremist group that's seized nearly 300 teenage girls in Nigeria.

The U.S., Britain, Canada, France, Israel and China have all sent teams to the western African country, which has been locked in a deadly struggle with al-Qaida-affiliated Boko Haram for almost a dozen years.

Wesley Wark, one of Canada's foremost experts on international and domestic terrorism, says the recent kidnapping has given the group an international platform and perhaps more notoriety than it deserves.

Washington has acknowledged that it is providing intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance support in an international effort to free the girls.

Wark says Boko Haram has represented a threat to the stability of Nigeria for years, especially in the northern region and in oil- and resource-rich areas. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Warlord Kony transfers power to young son

The fugitive African warlord Joseph Kony has handed over command of his group to one of his sons, a Ugandan military official said on Tuesday, an elevation that further marginalizes senior commanders who may threaten Kony's fading authority.

Salim Saleh was born in the 1990s, has spent all his life in the bush and is said to be as ruthless as Kony.

Kony is the subject of an international manhunt involving U.S. forces in parts of Central Africa, where his group — the Lord's Resistance Army — has wreaked havoc over the years, including the abduction of children. The LRA has taken boys who are then forced to become fighters and girls who become sex slaves. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Prince Charles calls youth to action on global challenges

Royal tour. First in line to the throne visits P.E.I., birthplace of Confederation

Prince Charles says the need to tackle the world's challenges became more evident for him after the birth of his grandson as he highlighted Tuesday the need to harness the creativity of young people to find innovative solutions to those problems.

Known for being outspoken on social and environmental issues, Charles said in a speech in Charlottetown that it's important to see the connections between the planet's challenges and its well-being.

"They all ... rest on the nexus of water, energy and food security and finding common purpose in meeting our common needs," he said.

"The health of nature's life-support systems ... has a direct bearing upon the health and well-being of people."

Dog deception. Bodies of 'stolen' dogs found in ditch

The bodies of six dogs initially reported stolen from the back of a dog walker's truck were found dumped in a ditch in Abbotsford, B.C., says an SPCA spokeswoman.

Lorie Chortyk said the agency retrieved the bodies of the young- to middle-aged dogs and transferred them Tuesday to a lab where necropsies will be done.

The results are expected within a week and will determine how long the dogs were left in a vehicle in Langley, where they are believed to have died in hot weather.

The necropsy results, along with interviews with the dog walker and any witnesses, will be part of the SPCA's report to Crown counsel, which will decide if animal cruelty charges will be laid.

The SPCA took over the investigation on Monday after the dog walker admitted the animals were not stolen.

The woman initially told police and the dogs' owners that she left her vehicle to use the washroom in a dog park and when she returned the dogs were gone.

Chortyk said the SPCA and police deal with hundreds of calls every year involving dogs left in vehicles.

Animal cruelty

The dog walker's name has not been released because charges have not been laid. But in addition to possible public mischief charges for falsely reporting a theft, she could face:

- B.C. Maximum fine $75,000 or two years in jail
- Criminal Code of Canada. Maximum fine $5,000 and 18 months jail

"If you either wilfully or through your actions allow an animal to suffer, that can be a criminal act."

Dogs don't sweat the way we do and can be overcome with heat exhaustion, brain damage or even death in as little as 10 minutes because the temperature in a car can rise quickly, she said. Animal cruelty charges could be laid under provincial or federal laws, Chortyk said.

RCMP have said the dogs apparently died in the back of the vehicle and they are looking into possible public mischief charges. THE CANADIAN PRESS

PM's project. Gates throws the gauntlet before maternal summit

The noted philanthropist Melinda Gates says an unacceptable number of newborn babies are dying in poor countries because the developed world simply isn't investing enough money to save them.

Gates is issuing an international call for more funding as she helps launch new research in the medical journal The Lancet on the plight of new mothers, babies and young children in developing countries.

The frank talk from Gates means more spending pressure on Prime Minister Stephen Harper as he hosts a major international meeting next week on his signature aid initiative — maternal, newborn and child health.

Harper committed $2.8 billion to the cause at the G8 summit Canada hosted in 2010 and is chairing a three-day international meeting in Toronto as a follow-up to raise awareness.

Each year 2.9 million newborn babies die around the world, while another 2.6 million are stillborn, the Lancet study concluded.

That's half the 1990 rate but still too high, according to the 55 experts from 18 countries that contributed to the report. The Lancet study estimates that by 2020 it would cost about 91 cents per person to lower the annual death rate of newborns by 1.3 million, while reducing stillbirths by 530,000 per year. "Canada has been one of the leaders in this," said Dr. Mickey Chopra of the UN. THE CANADIAN PRESS

New report. Canadian children and youth were assigned a D-minus grade for overall activity levels

A new report reveals that the overall physical activity levels of Canadian kids are lagging behind those of youngsters from other nations.

For the first time, Active Healthy Kids Canada is using its annual Report Card on Physical Activity for Children and Youth to see how Canadians measure up to kids in 14 other countries.

The findings were released Tuesday at the first-ever Global Summit on the Physical Activity of Children being held in Toronto.

Canadian children and youth were assigned a D-minus grade for overall physical-activity levels.

Canada trailed near the back of the international pack along with Australia, Ireland and the U.S. — who were also each assigned a D-minus — while Scotland received an F. Mozambique and New Zealand topped the list for activity levels. The report found that 84 per cent of Canadian three- to four-year-olds met early years guidelines of at least 180 minutes of daily physical activity at any intensity. But only seven per cent of five- to 11-year-olds and four per cent of 12- to 17-year-olds in Canada meet guidelines. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Target aims for bull's-eye with new head in Canada

Changes. Top exec of Canadian operations is out after retailer's expansion to Great White North missed the mark

Target has fired the president of its troubled Canadian operations, Tony Fisher, and is replacing him with a 15-year U.S. company veteran in a bid to address inventory issues and bring customers back into its stores.

The executive shakeup in Canada comes two weeks after the abrupt resignation of Target's CEO and chairman Gregg Steinhafel.

The third-largest U.S. retailer announced Tuesday that Mark Schindele, 45, who was senior vice-president of merchandising operations, will now run the Canadian operation.

Target's expansion into Canada last year marked its first foray outside the U.S., but it has struggled with weak sales and losses.

The changes are effective immediately.

Schindele has played a key role in launching a new store format including an expanded grocery area, as well as Target Express and CityTarget in the U.S. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The disaster has provoked anger at a critical time for Erdogan, as he mulls running in August's presidential election.

KIMYE: APRÈS MARIAGE, LE DÉLUGE

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

Coming up this week: the defining moment of our age.

Famous-for-nothing Kim Kardashian is marrying the Biggest Ego on the Planet, "Yeezus" Kanye West, at the Forti De Belvedere in Florence on Saturday, the day after they and their guests take a private tour of the Palace of Versailles, former home of Louis XV, who famously said, "Après moi, le déluge."

Well, it never rains, but it pours.

The original plan was for the couple to be married in Versailles, but the people who run the palace must have learned something after the wretched excesses of the Sun King and Marie Antoinette and will only allow a tour.

Of course, the palace is just a tumbrel ride away from the Place de la Concorde in downtown Paris, where former occupants of the palace lost their heads, victims of the wrath of the Republic.

The only mobs following Kim and Kanye around are paparazzi, although they're bad enough: Kim eats an ice cream cone on the Left Bank! Kim goes to the gym! Kim shows half a boob in display of pre-wedding fitness! Nothing about this wedding and its preparations escapes the scrutiny of the tabloid channels.

For example: Kim turned up in Paris with 10 suitcases, which must have made for an interesting answer to the question "Avez-vous quelque chose à déclarer?"

And this: the ice cream flavour was brittle nut macadamia, and the couple ordered two scoops.

The bill came to 14 euros, which is like 10 bucks an ice cream cone.

"J'adore Paris," observed KK.

Come on! How much more of this can we take? A lot, apparently. It's only Wednesday.

Am I the only one left in the world to remember that Kim Kardashian has done absolutely nothing to acquire her vast, social-media stoked wealth and fame?

Nobody else seems to care. Celebrity is celebrity. Kim has even spawned a growth industry called Kardashian.

For example, on the same day La Kim went out for ice cream on the Left Bank, her kid brother Rob engaged in a Tweet fest with the media because he is fat.

I mean, 35 per cent of the U.S. over-20 population is fat.

That's not news. Or it's bad news. But it's Rob Kardashian's claim to fame. In fact, the body weight of the entire clan is a national obsession. Kim and her sisters Kourtney and Khloé alert the media every time their clothes fit.

But really, it's all about Kim.

If I'm Kanye West and I'm touring the fabulous Hall of Mirrors on Friday, I might cast a quick glance at myself and make sure I still cast a reflection.

Because even the world's largest ego is going to have trouble keeping up with the Kardashian(s).

Yeezus.

Saving the three-banded armadillo

A Brazilian environmental group has launched an effort to save the endangered three-banded armadillo, the mascot for the World Cup starting next month.

The armadillo is in danger of extinction, largely because of deforestation and hunting in its habitat in the shrub lands of northeastern Brazil. Its meat is considered a delicacy by many in the region.

World Cup baller

Those risks in large part are why the armadillo was chosen as World Cup mascot. Another is that when it's frightened, it rolls up into a ball small enough to fit into one hand, looking like a tan soccer ball.

Its hard shell protects it from its natural predators, jaguars and foxes, but it becomes easy prey for hunters since it does not dig a hole to hide in.

Blended mix meets match

Drew Barrymore and Adam Sandler play a widowed mom and a divorced dad who meet on a family safari after a disastrous blind date in Blended. CONTRIBUTED

When two families commingle. From The Brady Bunch to its film granddaddy, Yours, Mine and Ours, Hollywood loves a blended family story

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

The Brady Bunch is pop culture's most famous blended family.

The story of a "lovely lady who was bringing up three very lovely girls," and a "man named Brady with three boys of his own," who "would somehow form a family," ran for fives seasons on TV, endlessly in reruns and even spawned two movies.

"The Brady Bunch is a live-action modern fairy tale of family," says Christopher Knight who played Peter Brady on the original show. "In this context it's less odd that it's lasted for over 30 years; and why it may last in some respects as long as Mother Goose!"

He may be optimistic on the eternal appeal of his show, but he's not wrong to imply that the idea of blended families could remain the subject of stories and movies for years to come.

This weekend "cinematic soulmates" Drew Barrymore and Adam Sandler reunite for a third time, following The Wedding Singer and 50 First Dates, for Blended, a romantic comedy about the mixing and mingling of two families.

Hollywood has been blending screen families for years. The grandfather of these blended family stories has to be Yours, Mine and Ours.

Based on the memoir Who Gets the Drumstick? by Helen Beardsley, this 1968 Lucille Ball, Henry Fonda film sees a widow with eight kids and a widower with 10 children (including Mike, played by Tim Matheson 10 years before he found fame in Animal House) become one big (almost) happy family.

The film was produced by Ball, who became so friendly with the Beardsleys she treated all 20 of them to a trip to Disneyland. ABC and Paramount Studios were so impressed with the film they gave the green light to the similarly themed The Brady Bunch show.

The same year, movie legend Doris Day made her final big-screen appearance in With Six You Get Egg Roll, a blended family story about a widow with three sons who marries a man with a daughter. The kids don't see eye to eye, but soon figure out a way to live together. Released so soon after Yours, Mine and Ours, Eggroll got good reviews, but, as Roger Ebert wrote at the time, "would probably seem funnier if it didn't suffer by comparison."

Finally, Step Brothers is an R-rated look at extreme Peter Pan Syndrome. Will Ferrell and John C. Reilly play 40ish men who become bunkmates and reluctant stepbrothers when their parents (Mary Steenburgen and Richard Jenkins) marry. The familiar reprimand "Grow up and act your age" fell on deaf ears with these guys. It's like watching two overweight, foul-mouthed 10-year-olds with thinning hair going at each other, but it is good vulgar fun.

Third-time rom-com charm

Drew, Adam get their act together, again

Now that they're on their third romantic comedy together, Adam Sandler and Drew Barrymore are obviously big fans of each other — though Sandler says that until their latest, Blended, it was all an act. "I love Drew. I've known her a long time. In all three movies, we have the pleasure of falling in love. The first two I faked it. But this one I really did," he jokes about his Wedding Singer and 50 First Dates co-star, to which she responds, "You fake it good."

The secret to their long-standing partnership? Timing and patience, according to Barrymore. This time, with Blended, they take on a rather unique set of dating circumstances: A widower and a divorcee, each with multiple kids at home, who initially meet on a disastrous blind date and then end up accidentally sharing a family vacation to Africa, where being forced to spend time with each other gives them a chance to reconsider each other's faults.

For their third go-round together, Sandler and Barrymore find themselves playing parents, which might have as much to do with their age as it does with the fact that both stars now have kids at home. As far as how she's doing as a new mom? Her co-star gives her high marks. "You're all about your kids," he says, smiling. Not to be outdone in the mutual appreciation society, Barrymore has some nice things to say about Sandler's parenting skills as well: "You're a good, patient, loving, awesome parent much like your character in the movies. That's always what I've taken away from it," she tells him. Get a room, you two.

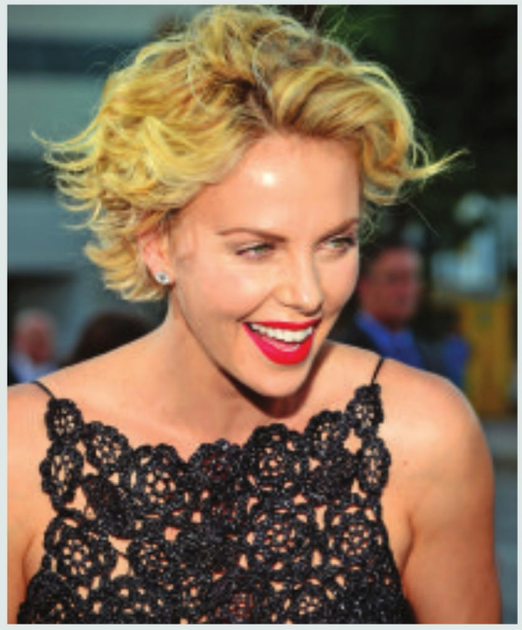
OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

The Word

Charlize shares that things are haPenning with Sean



Charlize Theron is finally opening up about her blossoming relationship with Sean Penn, and all it took was an interview with Vanity Fair. "Sean and I have known each other for 18 years. We were just really good friends," she tells the magazine. "And it's been slow going because you are aware that you could screw that up and lose it. We had to think about it. But at the end of the day, it was somewhat effortless. It just kind of naturally happened, and before I knew it I was in something that was making my life better. The people who really love me can see the effect it has had on me." She does admit, though, that the paparazzi attention has made developing a relationship a bit awkward. "I don't know how you have a healthy relationship with the whole world knowing about it," she says. "Look, we're dating, and I don't think we were trying to hide anything. We were photographed, the relationship was kind of written about. I recently did a day-long press junket, which I hadn't done in forever, and it's a harsh reminder that whatever people try to hide a press junket behind, it's really a roundabout way of getting at as much private s—— as they can. It was all about what I like to eat and avoiding questions about Sean or my son."

Nicole doesn't Kid about her man and her fam

Nicole Kidman is ready to give up her film career all together in favour of her family — she's just waiting for husband Keith Urban to ask. "If he said no, I wouldn't have done it. That's how we are," she tells the Daily Mail about her latest role as Grace Kelly in Grace of Monaco, which debuted at the Cannes Film Festival. "I know this sounds old-fashioned, but I do put it on the table. Because if it won't work for us, then I'm not doing it." When asked point-blank if she would quit acting should Urban request such a move, Kidman says, "Yeah, if he asked me. No question."

Sandra speaks: Actress advises teens about life, love and nose-picking

Sandra Bullock

Seniors at Warren Easton Charter High School in New Orleans got quite a surprise when their graduation speaker turned out to be none other than Oscar-winner Sandra Bullock, according to E! News. And Bullock had some choice advice for the young adults in attendance. "Stop worrying so much. I don't remember any of the moments in my life where I worried. Raise the bar higher. Nothing is a failure, it's just not supposed to work out," she told the crowd. "Eat something green every day. Do not pick your nose in public — how about we just go get a tissue? When someone who cares about you hugs you, hug them back. If someone doesn't want to play with you, it's OK. Not everybody is going to love us. And last but not least, go find your joy. It's what you're going to remember in the end. It's not the worry, it's not the what-ifs. It's the joy that stays with you."

Finding the real Istanbul

Wanderlust. Turkey's famed city has your typical tourist haunts, but stray from beaten path for so much more

The Istanbul neighbourhood of Karakoy, with its cafés and galleries, has become a hub for the young. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Istanbul, the noisy Turkish metropolis on the Bosporus Strait lauded by many a travel ranking, has much more to offer than grand mosques and bazaars. Away from the din of typical tourist haunts, a walk around the neighbourhoods of Karakoy, Balat and Kuzguncuk will peel back the surface to reveal the city's multilayered history. As proof of Turkey's popularity, TripAdvisor just named the country the world's top destination, based on the website's ratings and user reviews.

Karakoy

Descending from the Galata Tower in the Beyoglu district, often regarded as the "pulse of Istanbul," one of the city's steepest hills will lead to Karakoy, an up-and-coming area hemming the Bosporus Strait. This one-time industrial neighbourhood is still home to a number of shops where anything from fishing equipment to Bunsen burners can be procured. But the hardware stores and workshops must now negotiate their space with new galleries and cafés that have created a hub for young hipsters. Past the Karakoy ferry terminal, one street over from the water, look for Namli Gurme, a restaurant and small marketplace offering a large selection of "mezes," or cold appetizers. Also served here is a cut of meat called "lokum," which means Turkish delight and is the term for anything wildly tasty and juicy (unlike the narrower meaning of the term Turkish delight outside the country, referring only to chewy sugary candies).

Balat

The Balat district is a quiet historic area by the Golden Horn, the narrowest stretch of the Bosporus. Its twisting streets and weathered houses, like antiques in an open museum, echo a past occupied by waves of Jewish, Greek, Bulgarian and Armenian residents. The area is now home mainly to working-class Turks from Black Sea towns and Central Anatolia. Adventurous tourists who can find the beauty in the decaying buildings and are willing to forgo the reliability of a map will enjoy wandering the hilly streets. Walking from the Galata Bridge by the seaside toward the end of the Golden Horn, the Gul Mosque is not to be missed. Formerly known as Saint Theodosia church, the cross-in-square orthodox church was converted into a mosque by Ottomans.

Kuzguncuk

On the Asia side of this continental crossroads of a city, the quiet, pictorial village of Kuzguncuk is minutes away from the Uskudar ferry terminal. It's lauded as a quieter, perhaps less jaded version of upscale Ortakoy on the European side. It is another well-known Jewish quarter, home to two synagogues. Among the seaside fish restaurants bearing views of the Bosporus Bridge, Ismet Baba generates the most fanfare. Uryanizade Sokak, running perpendicularly from Ismet Baba and the seaside, is a restored street lined with Ottoman houses and studios for artists. Farther north, the waterside showcases a string of Istanbul's famous classic wooden-framed mansions, known as "yali." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A serving of spring

Vegetable Primavera.
The word 'primavera' literally means 'spring' in Italian. Add asparagus and fiddleheads for a seasonal touch

DINNER EXPRESS
Emily Richards
food@metronews.ca

Once May hits, fresh vegetables become a bigger part of everyone's kitchen repertoire. Outdoor markets also begin to flourish and become colourful.

Taking the time to stroll through the market or grocery store can easily become daunting, so make a list! Choose a few great delicious recipes for the week and make your list, then set your sights on the market and grocer.

There is always a little room for wandering, but if time is of the essence, that grocery list will make you more efficient and ensure you're not wasting veggies by not using them.

Primavera means springtime in Italian, which makes sense as this dish showcases fresh vegetables and colours.

My version uses vegetable cocktail juice, which many people have on hand. It can, however, be easily substituted with your favourite pasta sauce.

Use your favourite spring vegetables like asparagus or fiddleheads. But don't worry that seasonality will ruin this dish, because your can get peppers, tomatoes and peas year-round! When you get bored, change up the vegetables and use a variety of colours. This pasta is also a wonderful way to use up leftover roasted or grilled vegetables.

Normally made with just vegetables, this version uses tofu for an added twist and a hit of protein.

Grind some fresh black pepper to finish the dish.

Ingredients

- 1 tbsp (15 ml) extra-virgin olive oil
- 2 cups (500 ml) cubed firm tofu
- 3 cloves garlic, minced
- 1/4 tsp (1 ml) hot pepper flakes
- 1 cup (250 ml) vegetable cocktail juice
- 2 cups (500 ml) chopped fresh asparagus or peas
- 1 red bell pepper, thinly sliced
- 1 carrot, julienned
- 1 yellow or green zucchini, julienned
- 8 oz (227 g) whole-wheat fettuccine or linguine pasta
- 2 tbsp (30 ml) chopped fresh Italian parsley (optional)
- 3 tbsp (45 ml) freshly grated Parmesan cheese

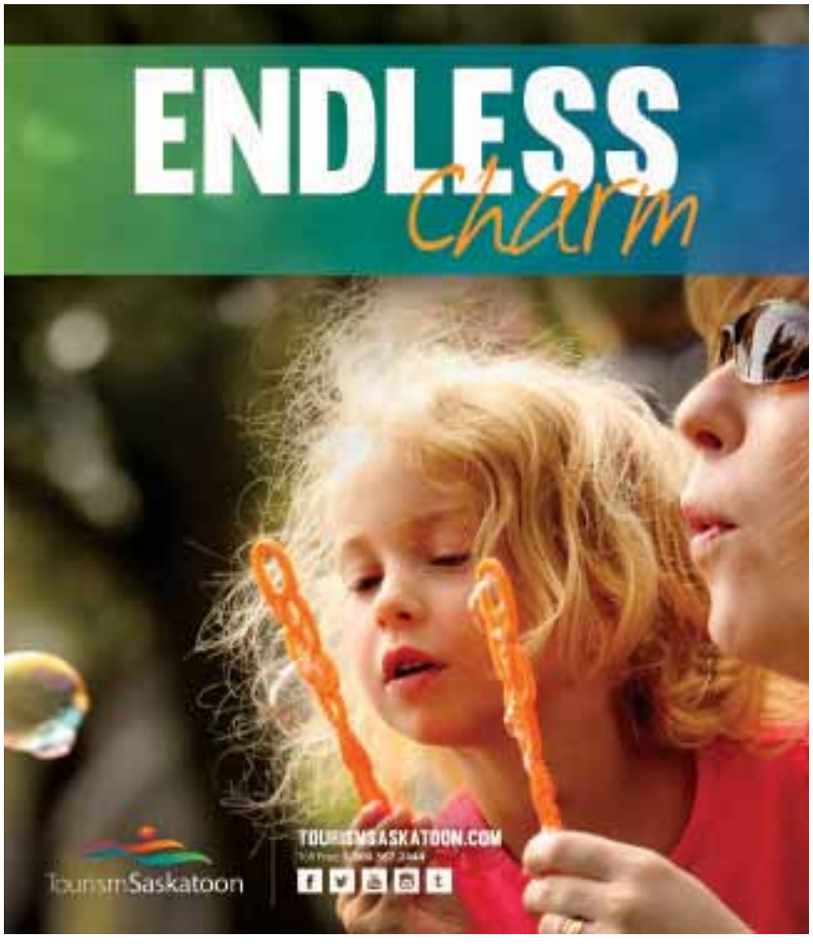
FLASH FOOD
From your fridge to your table in 30 minutes or less

This recipe serves six. EMILY RICHARDS

1. In non-stick skillet, heat oil over medium-high heat. Brown tofu on all sides for about 3 minutes; remove to plate.

2. In same skillet over medium heat; cook garlic and red pepper flakes for 30 seconds. Add vegetable cocktail juice and stir to combine. Add asparagus, red pepper, carrot and zucchini; cook, stirring 10 minutes or until vegetables are tender crisp.

3. Meanwhile, in large pot of boiling salted water; cook fettuccine for about 8 minutes or until tender but firm. Drain and add to skillet. Stir in reserved tofu and toss to coat well. Sprinkle with parsley, if using and cheese.



Carrots moonlight as fettuccine pasta

1. Heat the oven to 350 F.

2. In a shallow baking dish, spread the walnuts in an even layer and bake on the oven's middle shelf for 8 to 10 minutes, or until they smell fragrant. Remove and set aside.

3. Meanwhile, using a swivel blade or a Y-shaped vegetable peeler, peel the carrots into long fettuccine-like strands, discarding the core (or saving it for a snack or a stock).

4. In a large skillet, combine 1 cup of the chicken broth with the lemon zest, a hefty pinch of salt and several grinds of pepper. Whisk the mixture until the lemon is well distributed.

This Lemony Carrot "Fettuccine" with Toasted Walnuts serves four. MATTHEW MEAD/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ingredients

- 1/2 cup chopped walnuts
- 2 lbs large carrots, peeled, stem ends discarded
- 1 1/4 cups low-sodium chicken or vegetable broth, divided
- 1 tbsp grated lemon zest
- Salt and ground black pepper
- 2 oz low-fat cream cheese
- 1 tsp lemon juice
- 2 tbsp chopped fresh chives

5. Cut up the cheese into small pieces and add it to the skillet along with the carrots. Cover the skillet tightly and bring the broth to a boil.

6. Reduce the heat and simmer the carrots, covered, for 3 minutes. Remove the lid, and stir the carrots gently with tongs to make sure the cheese is well distributed. Cover and simmer, adding the additional broth if the mixture seems dry, for another 1 to 2 minutes, or just until the carrots are tender.

7. Stir in the lemon juice, then season with salt and pepper. Divide the carrot "fettuccine" between 4 serving plates, then top each portion with a quarter of the toasted walnuts and the chives. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS/SARA MOULTON, AUTHOR OF SARA MOULTON'S EVERYDAY FAMILY DINNERS

Sending out those CVs too swiftly can lead to a legacy of 'We'll let you know'

Resumé on the run.
Remember to take extra care when you're casting your net extra-wide

LAUREN MARINIGH
TalentEgg.ca

Don't be so speedy with your CV that you forget to check your spelling. ISTOCK

Everyone has been there: You're in such desperate need of a job, be it part-time or full-time, that you're sending out applications to just about anyone.

But now, having submitted multiple resumés, you can't quite figure out why you're not hearing back from employers. Here are some common things you may be doing that affect your job application.

Nothing says "hire me" like a blank email

Typing up a personalized email for every single place you apply is time-consuming.

You may think everything that the employer needs to know is in your attached resumé and cover letter, but a blank email shouts: "I'm too lazy to take the time to personalize this application for you."

Your email doesn't need to be (and shouldn't be) as detailed as your cover letter, but you should give your potential employer a brief overview of yourself, what job you're applying for, and why.

If a company receives hundreds of job applications, the ones that have blank emails will have an even harder time standing out from the pack and making it to the next round in the process.

Your resumé is just straight-up terrible

You're young and you may not have loads of work experience.

That's fine, but in 2014 there's no reason your resumé should have zero layout, be extremely disorganized, and/or be longer than if you had 20-plus years' experience.

It's so easy to have a clean, crisp resumé. Get started by searching "free resumé templates" in Google and download one ASAP; all you'll need to do is fill in the blanks.

In the long run, you'll probably want to make a resumé from scratch, but seeing samples can help you start thinking about (and planning) your own.

If you don't have much work experience, showcase other accomplishments you may have, such as volunteer experience or extra-curricular activities. There's no reason your resumé should include your education alone.

It should be no longer than two pages, and there's really no reason it should be more than one. Take a look at what's on your resumé: The drama award you won in Grade 5 is probably irrelevant now.

You miss important details on your resumé/cover letter

Everyone has done it — sent out an application without changing some key pieces of information.

Forgetting to change your career objective or including a cover letter for the wrong position are both surefire ways to get overlooked.

Take your time when applying for jobs and proofread everything. When an employer gets an application with the wrong company and position listed on it, it'll more than likely go straight into the trash, no matter how qualified you are.

Job description? What job description?

You got so excited when you realized a new position had opened up at your favourite business or dream workplace that you forgot to read the entire job description before you applied.

Had you read the job description, you'd realize that the employer asked for you to attach a portfolio (which you didn't), or asked for someone who speaks French (which you don't).

Don't waste your time, or an employer's. Take the time to read the job description thoroughly and make sure you have the specific skills required for the role.

Rangers forward rich in experience

Conference finals. After winning a cup in '04, Brad Richards taking on a new role in New York

Brad Richards celebrates after scoring a goal against the Canadiens in Game 1 of the Eastern Conference finals on Saturday. A decade after winning his last cup, Richards has emerged as a leader in New York. BRUCE BENNETT/GETTY IMAGES

It's Brad Richards' turn to be the old hand, tutoring his young New York Rangers teammates on what it's like to win a Stanley Cup.

It wasn't like that in 2004, when Richards and teammate Martin St. Louis won the cup with the Tampa Bay Lightning.

"This whole playoffs it's been fun to do that," the 34-year-old Richards said Tuesday. "When I was in Tampa, Marty also, we didn't really have a clue what we were doing.

"We were first time through it, leaning on other people, older people, asking them all the questions. It's fun to try to gather the group and talk about things. This group has come together so much and they ask a lot of questions. They make fun of us a lot for doing that, too, but it's fun to try to help out that way."

The Rangers are two wins away from a trip to the Stanley Cup final after taking the opening two games of the NHL Eastern Conference final from the Canadiens in Montreal.

They swamped the Canadiens 7-2 in the series opener on Saturday, but then needed a 40-save effort from Henrik Lundqvist to pull out a 3-1 win Monday.

Game 3 is set for Thursday night at Madison Square Garden.

In 2004, the Canadiens came back to beat Boston in the opening round but then were swept by the Lightning. This year, Montreal is again coming off a Game 7 win over the Bruins and is in danger of losing in four straight.

That has Richards, a P.E.I. native who played junior hockey in Quebec, and Montreal native St. Louis at 6-0 in career playoff games against the Canadiens. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Breaking the Hab-it

Montreal coach Michel Therrien said his team is confident it can still win the series if it gives up fewer odd-man rushes and keeps up the fast-paced game it brought on Monday.

- "I believe that we will turn it around," said Therrien. "The first game was tough for us emotionally and physically. We didn't get much time between Game 7 (against Boston) and Game 1 (against the Rangers), and it was an afternoon game. It shows in the result. But I thought we regrouped really well."
- Therrien spoke to the media on a conference call while his players took what he said was a much-needed day off. They will practise on Tuesday before flying to New York.

Coach Kerr takes his seat in the sun

The Golden State Warriors introduced Steve Kerr as their new coach Tuesday at a packed news conference at the team's downtown Oakland headquarters. Kerr signed with the Warriors for five years and about $25 million after rejecting an offer from mentor Phil Jackson to coach the New York Knicks.

"I'm convinced Phil is going to make it work in New York, but when I sat down with the Warriors, it just clicked," Kerr said. "I think it's the right fit for me."

Kerr plans to finish his duties broadcasting the Western Conference finals for TNT before starting with the Warriors.

Bruins still built to beat best: Boss

Cam Neely says the Bruins are still set up to contend for the Stanley Cup for years to come.

Speaking at a news conference a week after Boston was eliminated from the playoffs by archrival Montreal, the Bruins' president noted that most of the roster is made up of young but experienced players — aside from 37-year-old Zdeno Chara.

"And Zdeno is still, in my opinion, the best defender in the game," Neely said. "So I still think we're in our window."

NFL dispensed drugs recklessly: Player lawsuit

Opening another legal attack on the NFL over the long-term health of its athletes, a group of retired players accused the league in a lawsuit Tuesday of supplying them with powerful painkillers and other drugs that kept them in the game but led to serious complications later in life.

The lawsuit, which seeks unspecified damages on behalf of more than 500 ex-athletes, charges the NFL with putting profits ahead of players' health.

To speed injured athletes' return to the field, team doctors and trainers dispensed drugs illegally, without obtaining prescriptions or warnings of the possible side effects, the plaintiffs contend.

Some football players said they were never told they had broken bones and were instead fed pills to mask the pain. One said that instead of surgery, he was given anti-inflammatory drugs and excused from practices so he could play in games.

Others said that after years of free pills from the NFL, they retired addicted to painkillers.

The case comes less than a year after the NFL agreed to pay $765 million to settle lawsuits from thousands of retired players who accused it of concealing the risks of concussions.

2014 Dodge Dart

- Type. Four-door, front-wheel drive compact sedan
- Engines (hp). 2.0-litre inline four-cylinder (160), 1.4-litre inline turbo-charged four-cylinder (160), 2.4-litre inline four-cylinder (184)
- Base price (incl. destination). $17,690

Market position

The all-new Dodge Dart debuted for model year 2013 desperately looking to make some headway for Chrysler in Canada's largest and most competitive segment: compact car. Dart makes its case with a slightly bigger body and interior than the competition, stylish looks, and very modern infotainment accoutrements.

Points

- All-new vehicle in 2013, with a North American specific design, developed from a Fiat architecture first utilized on Alfa Romeo Giulietta.
- Five models for 2014: SE, SXT, Aero, Limited, GT.
- Exclusive to Aero model is 1.4 turbo and dual-clutch automatic transmission (optional), which offers a fuel economy rating of 7.2 L/100 km city and 4.9 L/100 km highway (39/58 mpg).

The extra blackness of Rally Group's wheels really pops.

Safety

Constructed of 68 per cent high-strength steel; 10 standard air bags; standard four-wheel disc brakes, traction control and stability control; available rear backup camera, blind spot monitoring, rear cross path detection, ParkSense Rear Park Assist; LATCH anchors that allow child seat to be placed in three rear-seat seat positions.

Review. Love it or not, the 2014 Dodge Dart is a comely and well-equipped beast

drive@metronews.ca

PHOTOS: MIKE GOETZ

Depending on how you like your compact car configured, you'll either love or ignore the 2014 Dodge Dart.

If you like base models, with their keen pricing and the extra fuel efficiency provided by their smallish engines, you might want to look elsewhere.

The Dodge SE base model's 2.0-litre engine is neither fuel efficient nor snappy.

If you want to spend a bit more, and can, the Aero model is very fuel-efficient and snappy. Its high-tech 1.4-litre turbo engine, with 160 horsepower and 184 lb-ft of torque, is entertaining, especially when mated to the six-speed manual. Its only other transmission option is a fancy-pants dual-clutch version that promises quick and fun shifts in either self-shifting or automatic mode. But that transmission's "herky-jerky" manners at low speeds around town has not won it many fans.

So for model year 2015, Chrysler decided a couple of adjustments were in order for Dart.

The engine and transmission combination that did get some love from customers was the conventional six-speed automatic transmission and the 2.4-litre "Tigershark" Multi-Air engine with 184 horsepower and 171 lb-ft of torque. In 2013 the Tigershark was only available on the top-shelf GT model. For 2014, the engine has been made standard on the mid-level SXT and Limited models, as well as GT.

Hallelujah.

Our test victim was one of these newly endowed Darts — an SXT, outfitted with the six-speed automatic.

Energuide rates this vehicle at 9.2 L/100 km City, and 6.3 Highway.

It's a comely and well-equipped beast.

The extra blackness of the Rally Group's aluminum wheels and front grille really "pops" amid the overall white-ness of this particular SXT. I always thought the Dart was a handsome vehicle; this black-and-white version is even more so.

On the road, the Dart feels really stable and confident and comfortable — a result of lots of European-based Fiat and Alfa engineering in its chassis DNA. While the engine and transmission combo are super smooth and powerful, I wouldn't call it charismatic. But that large, unstressed engine really suits the Dart.

Volvo is considering sensors that watch the driver, monitoring things like where the driver is looking. VOLVO

Has Volvo found the solution to distracted driving?

In development.

The car company is researching sensors that can tell when the driver is sleepy or not paying attention

drive@metronews.ca

One of the major factors in car crashes is driver inattention. It can be deadly to ignore what's happening outside the windshield, whether because of fatigue, daydreaming, or looking at the stereo or a phone.

Several automakers are working on solutions to the problem, including Volvo, which is researching sensors that watch the driver. By monitoring such things as where the driver is looking, head position and angle, and how open the eyes are, the system can recognize inattention and take steps to ensure safety.

"If you know that a driver is distracted, you can activate features such as a forward collision warning," says Per Landfors, project leader for drive support functions at Volvo Cars in Sweden. "This is still in the experimental stage. The sensors aren't much different (from existing ones), but what's new is how they're connected to the car, and how the car adapts to you."

The technology uses a sensor that's mounted on the dash in front of the driver. It uses infrared light, emitted by small LEDs, to illuminate the driver to be visible to the sensor. People can't see infrared, so the driver doesn't notice it.

The sensor works like a camera and takes pictures, but doesn't store them. Instead, it analyzes the information in the picture, discards it, and then repeats the process, several times a second. "The car doesn't save any pictures, nor does it have a driver surveillance function," Landfors says.

If the sensor realizes that a driver isn't paying attention, it can activate some of the car's safety functions, depending on what it detects. For a sleepy driver, something like a quick brake pulse could wake him up. If the driver is distracted, systems that warn about imminent collisions, or that can stop the car completely if it's about to hit something, can be adjusted to intervene much sooner than they normally would. "If you're totally aware of what's going on, these can intervene a little bit later," Landfors says. "You only get the warning when you need it."

The system also has the potential to enhance driving for an alert operator. For example, if the system detects that the driver is looking at something on the road, it could aim the headlights toward it for better visibility.

Although the current system under development doesn't save or upload photos, Landfors says that at some time in the future, it is possible that the sensor could take a picture of the driver following a crash and forward it to emergency personnel, who would know in advance what type of trauma care will be necessary.

Coming soon?

Volvo expects that the recognition system will be available in cars by 2020, but possibly sooner than that.

- Current Volvo cars can detect a drowsy driver, but this system can differentiate between drowsiness and inattention.
- Such systems may be a key to self-driving cars, which will need to know if a driver is paying attention and can take over the task.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
There are many things you have wanted to say but held back because you didn't want to upset people. With the Sun changing signs, you have no choice but to speak up. If you don't, it will be you who suffers.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
For the past few weeks, all eyes have been on you and there were times when you wanted to hide. Now you can, for a bit. Sooner or later though, you'll be back in the spotlight.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Everything is right with the world. Or, if it isn't, it soon will be. The Sun moves into your sign today and a new solar year begins. What are your dreams? Now is the time to get serious.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Now that the Sun is moving into the most receptive area of your chart you will find it easier to deal with your sensitive side. For one thing you won't have to pretend that you never need a shoulder to cry on.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Get out and meet people who share your way of looking at things. On an individual level there is only so much you can do, but acting with others all things become possible.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You've been waiting in the shadows. And now is the hour to step out into the world and claim centre stage. The Sun's move into the career area of your chart will encourage you to be more ambitious.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
There will be an obvious change in your mood over the next two or three days. Where before you were high strung and often uptight now you will be relaxed and easygoing.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You seem to have got it into your head that you are entitled to something the world does not seem to want to give you. What happens today will make you realize that you get only what you fight for.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Find ways to get along with people who rub you the wrong way. Like it or not you are going to have to work closely with various individuals over the next few weeks, so forget about your differences.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
As the Sun moves into the work and wellbeing area of your chart today, slow things down — even if it means cutting back on your goals. Getting things done quickly is not as important as getting them done right.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
All worries of recent weeks will be swept away over the next 24 hours. No matter how difficult things have been for you, you will find new ways to make your dreams come true.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
You may not be in the mood to put yourself out for others but someone is in need of your assistance and you'll hate yourself in the long-term if you ignore them. SALLY BROMPTON
